Bigger & Better

Diehard fans know there's just one way to improve a Lululemon (page 22) store: make it bigger, so it can hold even more yoga pants and hoodies. That's exactly what the Vancouver brand did recently, opening its largest space yet, right downtown on Robson Street. The gorgeous new flagship store includes innovations such as a digital pant wall and an onsite testing and personalization shop. Huge shopping spree, here we come.

A SHOO-IN

Kate Middleton and Zooey Deschanel are already fans of designer Orla Kiely. Now, for the second time, the "Queen of Prints" has partnered with the respected footwear brand Clarks. End result?

The Orla Kiely x Clarks Autumn/Winter 2014 capsule shoe collection, which includes bold silhouettes and unexpected textures in six eclectic styles: the Dotty (pictured), Dora, Dorothy, Daphne, Dilly and Dixie. Find them all at Gravitypope (page 20), and get ready to put your best foot forward.

ONE OF A KIND

It's all fun and games: favourite family photos become family game nights with customized Monopoly boards from CafePress. Each game comes complete with all the bits and pieces you remember from long, lazy childhood afternoons—including Chance and Community Chest cards, green houses, red hotels, and the beloved racing car, Scottie dog and top hat—but the board is adorned with snapshots of your choosing. Select from themes such as love, family rules, birthday, baseball, best friends, then upload your most captivating candids and perfect portraits to create a unique keepsake. Available online at www.cafepress.ca.

In the Bag

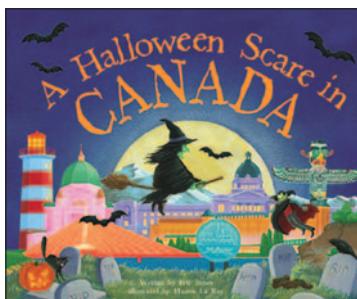

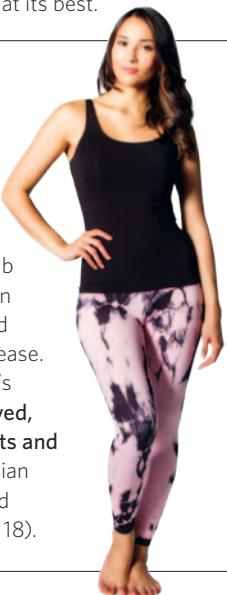

Starting Oct. 8, fashionistas-with-heart can help a worthy charity and get a new bag at the same time when Holt Renfrew (page 18) launches 20 limited-edition Gucci totes in python with bamboo handles. Each one retails for $2,900, and $500 of that goes to UNICEF's Schools for Africa, which provides education to millions of African children. Consider it retail therapy at its best.

Look Good, Feel Good, Do Good

Breast cancer is a cause close to Lexi Soukoreff's heart. The West Coast-based textile designer, founder of activewear company Daub + Design (www.daubanddesign.com), has watched friends and family members battle the disease. For the month of October, she's selling one-of-a-kind, hand-dyed, pink-and-black leggings, shorts and capris in support of the Canadian Breast Cancer Foundation. Find them at Dream Apparel (page 18).

SPOOKY STUFF

Witches, goblins, vampires and ghouls are taking over: the A Halloween Scare series has already sent chills through places such as New York, Washington and Florida, and now it's heading north of the border. A Halloween Scare in Canada by Eric James (Sourcebooks; $11.99) visits beloved Canuck locations such as Parliament Hill in Ottawa, Sambro Island Lighthouse in Nova Scotia, and the totem poles right here in Stanley Park. At local bookstores (page 16).
